

CAREER WISE

CONCISE FEATURES

RJ Capak/WireImage.com

Anna Kournikova keeps a watch on Omega in their ad campaign.

She's Got Game (and Money)

Tennis celeb Anna Kournikova has added some additional job experience to her sports resume—music video star. The Russian sports sweetheart is featured in Enrique Iglesias' Escape video, filmed in Los Angeles. Anna reportedly made more than $100,000 for her weekend of music video dancing and sharing love scenes with Enrique—not a bad amount to become a rock chick for a couple of days.

Finding Your Hidden Talents

Looking for a new job or career? Thinking of going back to school, but not sure where to focus? If you've ever wondered what job you're best suited for, there's a simple way to find out—by using Discover What You're Best At: A Complete Career System that Lets You Test Yourself To Discover Your Own True Career Abilities by Linda Gale ($14, Simon & Schuster). The book is chock-full of aptitude tests that measure your skills, talents and interests to match you with more than 1,100 positions. It's a must-read for women with career doubts!

All in a Day's Work

Sure, Julia Roberts is a movie star now, but was life so glamorous when she was a soda jerk? Even the biggest stars had to work menial jobs before they hit Hollywood, according to Greta Garbage's Outrageous Bathroom Book ($9.95, Ten Speed Press)...

- Oprah Winfrey was once Miss Fire Prevention.
- Geena Davis had a brief career as a window dresser.
- Jerry Hall may have been a model, but she once had the un-gorgeous job of shoveling manure.
- Cyndi Lauper cleaned out dog kennels.
- Keanu Reeves managed a pasta shop in Toronto.
- Before questioning what her next big role should be, Michelle Pfeiffer's biggest quandry was "Paper or plastic?"—she worked as a grocery cashier.
- Jon Bon Jovi rocked as a floor sweeper.
- Talk-show host Jenny Jones once sang as a back-up singer for Wayne Newton.

Julia

Jon

Oprah

Geena

Photos: Julia: Steve Granitz/WireImage.com; Jon: Courtesy Fox; Oprah: RJ Capak/WireImage.com; Geena: Courtesy ABC.

Photo: Courtesy of Rowenta.

business casual

The term "business casual" can mean a lot of things. Barbara Zagnoni, consumer education director for iron-manufacturer Rowenta, says the easiest way determine what to wear is to identify which level of dress your office follows:

Corporate Casual is just a jacket and tie away from traditional business attire. Classic Casual mixes dress pants or khakis with formal or casual shirts. Comfortable Casual is completely relaxed sports attire that could work in the office or at the beach.

Photo: John Russo.

"There's been so much expectation with the show, and I feel fine, but then everybody else gets so nervous and I'm like well, maybe I should be nervous, too."

—Jules Asner, on her E! Revealed! with Jules Asner interview show